Louis Chevrolet, French pilot, has been named as driver for Dave Reid's Ben Hur, which will make its bow in the racing game Saturday in the Grand American auto race at the Speedway. It is an open secret that Ralph De Palma would like to sit at the wheel of the new mount, but as this would leave Chevrolet without a car, owing to the return of the Sunbeam team to England, Reid saw an opportunity to add another celebrity to the galaxy of stars who will assemble for the big doings and signed up the noted driver.

De Palma will try his luck in a brown Peugeot. It is a case of life and death with Ralph this time, for defeat Saturday by either Aitken, Resta or Rickenbacker will mean elimination from the race for the 1916 championship award. On the contrary, should De Palma make any sort of a creditable showing, it will bring him right up on the heels of the leaders and leave the question open for settlement at Santa Monica.

Two new Mercers, driven by Pullen and Ruckstell, will make their first appearance on the Maywood track. Hughey Hughes will pilot the Chicago-backed Hoskins special. Hughes is an able driver and with this fast mount should bring himself well up among the winners. Fourteen cars and their drivers are already at the track tuning up for the 250-mile grind.

Five new linemen have come out for the Northwestern football team and prospects for a good eleven at Evanston are looking up. Coach Murphy sent the varsity through hard scrimmage practice yesterday and was well satisfied with the work.

BROOKLYN SHOWS POWER THAT WON NATIONAL PENNANT

By Mark Shields

Something resembling the attack that won them a pennant in the National league, and Brooklyn won a world's series game from the Boston Red Sox. The American league defense slipped once when Gardner made a bad throw, but Brooklyn won the ball game through excellent batting. Throw out the run scored on Gardner's bobbin and it would be a tie. But count in the run Jake Daubert failed to score when he had an easy homer registered and the Dodgers win. There is no good alibi for the Red Sox.

Daubert hit a triple, had an hour to score, but allowed himself to be blocked off the plate and lay on the ground until the ball got back from the outfield. It was a boner for Jake, in spite of the fact that Hugh Fullerton says so also.

Bill Carrigan was experimenting with this ball game. Otherwise he would have shot Dutch Leonard into the box. But he had a two-game margin and took a chance with Mays, a fellow who is uncertain. When he is right he is unhittable and when he isn't right the Athletics could win a pennant batting against his kind of pitching.

He was hit hard and was wild, but Brooklyn failed to profit as much as should have been expected. The score should have been larger, but the Dodgers passed up several opportunities.

This game hasn't proved anything unexpected. Taking four games straight from a club that has won its league pennant is a man's-sized task and one that requires a lot of luck for its consummation. The Red Sox are better than the Dodgers—they have an undeniable edge, but they are not enough better to win in straight battles, and never were.
